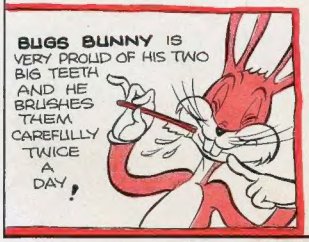
PORKY'S HOLLYWOOD SKETCH BOOK

TIBBY, A BLACK SCOTTY, IS THE ONLY DOG IN HOLLYWOOD WHO HAS HER OWN CHAIR ON A STUDIO STAGE. TIBBY BELONGS TO BETTE DAVIS AND HER LITTLE CHAIR ALWAYS STANDS BESIDE BETTE'S ON THE SOUND STAGE!

NINE YEAR OLD ANN TODD HAS WRITTEN TWO PIECES FOR THE PIANO. ONE, CALLED "TO MARJIE" IS DEDICATED TO HER STAND-IN IN PICTURES!

PATTY HALE MAKES HER OWN LITTLE POKE BONNETS WITH TINY OSTRICH PLUMES. SHE HAS A BONNET TO MATCH THE COLOR OF EACH OF HER DRESSES.



BUGS BUNNY IS VERY PROUD OF HIS TWO BIG TEETH AND HE BRUSHES THEM CAREFULLY TWICE A DAY!

THE STRANGEST PET IN HOLLYWOOD IS A SEA GULL. IT BELONGS TO ERROL FLYNN. HE FOUND THE BIRD IN HIS YARD WHERE IT HAD FALLEN WITH A BROKEN WING. ERROL HAD THE WING REPAIRED AND NOW THE SEA GULL REFUSES TO LEAVE HIS HOME!

Bugs Bunny was very busy. He whistled through his teeth, as he worked behind closed doors in the kitchen of his home. First he scooped out the insides of a large golden pumpkin. Then he carved a grinning face on the pumpkin's yellow side, cutting two circles for eyes, a triangle for a nose and a wide, curved slash for a mouth. Finally, when the face was finished to his satisfaction, he fastened a large candle securely inside the pumpkin head.

Bugs was gazing proudly at his handiwork, when Sniffles' small face appeared at the window. Quickly Bugs tried to hide the pumpkin. But it was too late. Sniffles' bright eyes had seen it.

"What you doin' with that punkin, Bugs?" Sniffles called through the window.

"Sh-h-h!" Bugs warned mysteriously. "Come in an' I'll show you."

When Sniffles entered the kitchen, Bugs carefully closed the door behind him. Then, with a flourish, he showed him the grinning jack-o'-lantern.

"It's sure a swell one," Sniffles said admiringly. "But aren't you makin' it early? Hallowe'en won't be here for several days."

"That's the idea!" Bugs exclaimed craftily, speaking in a low voice. "I wanta be early. If I wait till Hallowe'en, everybody'll have punkin heads, so mine won't be so scary. But now folks won't be expectin' to see one, so I can do a lotta scarin'."

"Who you goin' to scare first?" Sniffles asked quickly.

"Porky Pig!" Bugs chuckled. "He's an awful fraidy-cat. I can scare him easy."

"He's no more a fraidy-cat than you are," Sniffles loyally defended his good friend. "Everybody scares easy at Hallowe'en."

"Not me!" Bugs boasted loudly. "Nobody can scare me!"

"Don't be too sure. Hallowe'en's not here yet," Sniffles reminded him.

"Pooh for Hallowe'en!" Bugs scoffed, snapping his fingers. "I'm not afraid of all the Hallow'en witches and goblins in the world!"

Then he lowered his voice to a confidential whisper. "Wanta have some fun, Sniffles, an' help me scare ol' Porky?"

Sniffles hesitated a minute. Then he grinned.

"Sure," he said. "What do you want me to do?"

"Just this. Tonight at seven o'clock you go to Porky's house and ask him to walk down to the drugstore with you," Bugs directed. "You take him down Spruce Street, past all the vacant lots with those big billboards. You tell him you heard there was some kind of a strange creature, wanderin' around, an' that you were afraid to go to the drugstore after dark alone. Sorta build him up to be scared, you know. When you get to that billboard with the big loaf of bread on it, I'll jump out. I'll be all wrapped up in a sheet with this punkin for a head. You yell and run. Then I'll chase Porky. You can stop after a minute and watch the fun. How about it?"

"Okay," Sniffles agreed enthusiastically. "Sounds like a lotta fun, Bugs."

At seven o'clock that evening Bugs was crouched behind the shielding billboard on Spruce Street, waiting. He was swathed from head to foot in a long white sheet and carried the lighted jack-o'-lantern in his hand. It was a dark night and Spruce Street was silent and deserted.

Finally he heard the sound of footsteps and voices. Porky and Sniffles were coming toward him.

Bugs stood up, lifted the jack-o'-lantern and made ready to rush out upon the unsuspecting Porky.

Suddenly Bugs heard a low moan on the other side of the billboard. He stood still, frozen in his tracks, too frightened to move. The moan sounded again, louder this time. Then a dark shape slipped around the edge of the billboard. It drew nearer and nearer and, as it moved, the black figure shifted and Bugs saw a small glowing face, leering at him in the darkness.

With a wild yell of fright, Bugs dropped his jack-o'-lantern and fled around the billboard and down the street, stumbling and tripping in his dragging sheet. Finally his foot caught in a trailing fold of the cloth and he sprawled on the sidewalk.

Loud laughter and gay shouts followed.

Bugs looked up and saw three figures racing toward him. One was Porky. The second was Sniffles. The third was a small figure, wrapped in a black blanket. In its hand it carried a tiny lighted jack-o'-lantern. All three were gasping with laughter.

With a start of surprise, Bugs recognized the third figure in the black blanket. It was Little Blabbermouse!

"We decided to play your own game, Bugs, and see how brave you are," Sniffles chortled with glee. "Happy Hallowe'en!"

TREASURE GAME

You do not have to cut out this page to play the game. Just fold book back, and put on flat surface. Two players each use a button or similar object of different colors or if the same, with players' initials on them. First player holds a pencil about an inch above the number circle, saying, "Round I go, and here I stop!" The number he stops on, indicates the number of paces he may move his button on the game. Follow arrows on the dotted line. When beginning, if player happens to choose number 3, he moves his button from "START," counting 3 boxes. Since the box he stops on says, "Advance 2 paces," he moves his button over 2 more. But if player picks number 4, his button will be left at number 4 box until his next turn. Should first player get to the treasure first, he does not claim to win until second player has the last turn. If second player then arrives at the treasure, the game may be considered a tie. If second player does not then arrive at the treasure, or if he gets there first, there is only one winner.
